

CIVIS Going Public : Summerschool Schedule and Planning

Below is the list of stream groups offered for the CIVIS Going Public Summerschool. These groups will help organize students and faculty to discuss topics and address learning outcomes in-depth.

Each stream focuses on a different topic, and their descriptions will be provided below. The main meetings will include all streams, but each stream will have different preparatory work, readings, and online meetings. For this reason, their schedules will also be included.

Stream Descriptions

Migration and Diversity

Led by: Vassiliki Chryssanthopoulou (Athens) & Adrian Stoicescu (Bucharest)

This stream examines the formation and transformation of identities of migrants, people in exile, and members of diasporas, as these identities are manifested in both physical and virtual space (i.e. in websites). We examine basic concepts relating to migration and diversity (such as ethnicity, transnationalism, deterritorialization etc.) and illustrate them through various ethnographic examples. We look at the ways in which such mobile individuals and groups (re)create, maintain and transmit their identity-linked experiences, including traumatic ones, to their descendants and to the general public, by sharing their memories orally or in written form, as auto-ethnographic literature and/or oral history.

Participating students will acquire research training and practice in ways to conduct interviews and fieldwork with migrant, refugee or diaspora individuals and/or groups, in the context of either physical or virtual encounters.

Narratives and Oral Traditions

Led by: Georgios Kouzas (Athens) & Marianthi Kaplanoglou (Athens)

This workshop introduces to a total study of the diversity of oral performance situations in Greek local communities, conceiving local narrators not as passive tradition bearers, but rather as active agents in the reappropriation of existing traditions. We will study how members of a given folk group negotiate their social relations and attitudes not only through actions but also through artistic oral communication, its genres, themes and symbols. Based on a comparative perspective, we will also see the circulation of certain of these themes and motifs in Europe and the Mediterranean.

In a second level this workshop will focus on modern forms of orality in modern urban space like gossip and rumors. We will especially investigate how the issue of both public and private life, and how public events (even in the micro-level of the neighborhood or the macro-level of the city or the country where we live) pass to the private area through daily gossip.

Material Culture and Ecology: Topics in Public Anthropology

Led by: Claudia Campeanu (Bucharest) & Magda Craciun (Bucharest)

This stream introduces a more publically oriented anthropology through lectures, concrete examples, and practical exercises of disseminating anthropological knowledge to wider publics. The lectures reiterate the relevance of anthropological thought and practice in the diversified Europe of the 21st century. Moreover, the lectures explore the notion of the 'Public' and detail the interrelated practices of public anthropology, engaged anthropology, applied anthropology and participatory action research. The examples of how anthropologists engage wider publics are taken from research domains that the convenors of this stream are most familiar with, namely material culture and ecology. The exercises enable the practical employment of these notions and examples, and the development of a critical perspective on their uses.

Students are required to produce their own materials for a wider audience, in whichever format they feel more comfortable with, from written to audio and visual materials.

Material Culture and Identity

Led by: Gabriele Alex (Tuebingen) & Sarah Holst Kjaer (Stockholm)

In this stream, we explore the links between materiality/material culture and identity. We are asking how people relate to the world around them, such as e.g. the urban landscape, monuments, the lived-in environments but also those objects and materialities that frame our everyday life with different functions and in different ways.

To understand these relationships and to look at them with comparative perspective throws light on the construction of identity, belonging, as well as marginalization or exclusion.

We will start with lectures and texts, students will do a small exercise while still being at their home universities.

In Tübingen we will visit the Lindenmuseum and approach this topic with a museum-focused perspective. Students will then do little groupworks and practice methods and get a practical insight into this approach. We will then prepare a presentation and discuss how this knowledge and practice can support e.g. community-building or inclusion processes.
